Altoona, Pa. - The Penn State Altoona and Mount Aloysius College women's volleyball teams continued their support of fighting against breast cancer by participating in the Dig Pink® match hosted at Penn State Altoona's Adler Arena on Wednesday night.

Dig Pink® Night is an annual tradition that is hosted by Penn State Altoona every October. Donations were received throughout the match and go towards The Side-Out Foundation's Dig Pink® program, which advocates and supports the battle against metastatic breast cancer.

The cause receives nationwide participation from thousands of volleyball players who come together to help raise awareness for Side-Out's Precision Medicine Analysis Program in its breast cancer research.

All of the money goes towards the cause and every $2,000 serves one patient.

Over $1,500 has already been raised, with the goal set at $2,000.
